Attention, housekeepers! Attention, hotels! Attention, boarding-house keepers! Attention, clubs! unstamped genuine "Anchor brand" sheets, pillow cases, and bolsters at prices never quoted before.

Thousands of dollars' worth of goods actually sacrificed because of the hypercritical inspection rules—rules that require inspectors to be critical beyond use or reason. These inspectors "throw out" hundreds of made-up sheets, pillow and bolster cases, that we have found to be absolutely perfect. You'd just as soon have these as the ones they put their "Anchor Brand" stamp upon. We guarantee every piece offered to be free from imperfections that are really objectionable, though our agreement with the mill was to sell them "subject to slight imperfections." And so we do, but you can't find the defect.

Have you a hotel, a boarding-house, a summer cottage, or a home where bedwear needs replenishing? This famous make of bedwear never sold at these prices before.

OUTFIT A HOME FOR SEAMEN

Nations and States Aid in Worthy Cause at New York City.

Royal Penmen Sign Portraits for New Institute—States Offer Memorials for Their Seafarers.

New York, June 27.—To decorate the new institute for seamen which is just being completed in this city, portraits personally signed and sent by the rulers of England, Germany, Italy, and Denmark have to-day been received by the American Seamen's Friend Society. Realizing that many thousands of their subjects who follow the sea will soon be harbored in the $325,000 building of this American organization each year, King Edward, Kaiser Wilhelm II, Victor Emanuel III, and Frederick VIII have been quick to respond through diplomatic channels to a request for recognition of the international character of this enterprise.

When the modern hotel and club quarters is thrown open in August to the 7,000 sailors who arrive each day in this port, twelve nations of the world and many States in this country will be represented by some room, furnishing or decoration in the big building.

Ranged along beside the picture of Theodore Roosevelt which the President personally presented to the society last month, "with heartiest good wishes," portraits of royalty will be hung where every sailor may read the autographed inscription of his own sovereign. The bold handwriting of Kaiser Wilhelm himself is affixed in good English to his latest portrait, while the King of England has traced "Edward R and P" beneath his picture with his own hand. The same rare attention has been paid by the rulers of Italy and Denmark. This unusual courtesy is believed by the diplomats here to be a recognition of the service of eighty years, which the society has performed for millions of British, German, Italian, and Danish seamen, all over the world.

patronize a safe bank, a modern restaurant, an honest "shop shop" to replenish his kit, or ship through a special free bureau. For the first time in the history of the world, the merchant seaman in great numbers may here spend his time in port in just as retired, decent, and respectable surroundings as any other traveler.

"The chance to be as self-respecting as any other men in the sailor world," said G. McPherson Hunter, secretary of the American Seamen's Friend Society, at its headquarters, 75 Wall street, to-day. "I know the sailor, and I am sure he will find his first opportunity of living like other men in port. It has taken $250,000 to build our institute, and we are still looking for $50,000 to furnish it properly. It will open a world-wide benefit to the seaman, and every State and nation should surely be represented."

REGARDING EDUCATION.

A Suggestion that the Wander Year Be Again Allowed Tenth.

From the Chicago Evening Post. Why has modern education let go of the Wander Year? It has given nothing so valuable in its place. In the Middle Ages the young man approaching his majority made ready his staff, his wallet, and whatever silver he could get together and at the dawn of his freedom from apprenticeship, set forth with the blessings of his family for a year of travel and working his way in distant lands.

KING'S CAR UPSETS OFFICIALS

Three Haughty Town Dignitaries Sent Sprawling in Dust.

Complaint Made to the Police, Whereupon the Identity of Occupants of Car Is Made Known.

Rome, June 27.—The police authorities of this town are in a state of serious embarrassment. On Tuesday, along the high road which leads to Commananza, was proceeding a country cart drawn at a slow pace by a hairy nag, evidently somewhat tired. In the cart were three stout personages, the syndice, the communal secretary, and an assessor. They were carrying on a discussion concerning the affairs of the commune and their administration. Their steed, left to himself, changed his trot to a walk.

Suddenly from the white surface of the road there arose a cloud of dust, from which emerged a large motor car. The three occupants of the cart abandoned the discussion of local politics and began to think of their own safety, but it was too late. Frightened by the approach of the throbbing monster, the steed quickened his pace, and there was a slight collision, as the result of which the three glories of Ascoli Piceno were rolled in the dust.

The automobile was immediately brought to a standstill by two gigantic individuals, of military aspect, but dressed in civilian attire, who were escorting the car on bicycles, dismounted and raised the syndice and his companions from the ground, while a gentleman of short stature, who occupied the post of honor in the automobile, inquired with unaffected sympathy whether they were hurt.

They had not come to any great harm, but they were furious, and threatened all the penalties of the penal, not omitting also the civil, code, for the damage done to their vehicle. Soon came another cart, into which the angry functionaries climbed, while the motor car resumed its journey. At the first village they came to the syndice made a complaint against the occupants of the automobile and the cyclists, due note of which was taken by the chief police officer.

The syndice and his companions departed, but soon the chief of police was running after them, crying: "But the motorist is his majesty the King! I have just received the news by telephone!" Still, the denunciation had been made, and there was no means of annulling it. The chief of police must do his duty and report the complaint to the authorities. Certainly, the King will solve the difficulty in a satisfactory manner by paying for the cart, and, perhaps, by creating the trassibile syndice a chevalier.

GROANING BOARD OF PLENTY

In Fiction, Miss Braddon's a Better Feeder Than Beaconsfield.

Scott Knew Little of the Good Things for the Table—Ouida's Dinners Are Impossible.

Did you ever amuse yourself criticising and commenting upon the dinners served up to readers by popular novelists of the past and present? Among the writers of a quarter of a century ago gastronomic bouts formed an important feature of their fiction and many pages were devoted to enthusiastic descriptions of savory meals.

Miss Braddon's characters eat a great deal and she usually tells us what they consume. In moments of exalted emotion we generally find them with strawberries and champagne. An elopement or suicide seldom occurs in her pages unless there is a pate de foie gras in the neighborhood. Neither does she disdain Welsh rabbit and bitter beer.

It requires a strong stomach to sit at table with Sir Walter Scott's people, though it must be admitted that the cooking is plain and without pretension. Still, cold venison minus currant jelly is just a little difficult, and it is evident, proved by his own pen, that he really did not know a good dinner.

One can fancy Scott supping turtle soup and unconscious that a drop of sherry vastly improves it. One cannot help wondering that so good a man preferred quantity to quality. We must remember, however, that he never lived to know the glories of a canvassback duck, and while there is a reason to believe his heroes should not wild duck we feel perfectly sure that they roasted the birds until their breasts were black.

The dinners of the late Ouida are impossible; they have an air of being made up from a hotel bill of fare, which is fatal. A novelist should taste every dish before he or she serves it.

Lord Beaconsfield is unsatisfactory in this gastronomic respect. Gold glitter, candelabras flame, and there is an abundance of crystal, but the feast is really Barmecide.

The noble scribe was capable of serving a half orange or a boiled peacock on a gold salver, and if he did not adorn roast pheasants with diamond necklaces it was because it did not occur to him. Dickens betrays a lack of artistic and refined temperament in the art of dining. His characters feed; they seldom dine, and they are appropriate comrades for persons who become riotous over pie.

Thackeray is different; he is perhaps too fond of whitebait, but he really has Parisian taste and knows how to respect the feelings of the cook he immortalizes. Of many English novelists he is certainly worthy of a wreath of parsley. One is sure of finding Thackeray's burlesque of the correct temperature and his mutton done to a turn.

The modern American novelist either lives too much in the open or else uses the drawing room for climax, hence he often forgets that his hero or heroine must breakfast and dine. When we do meet them in the dining-room the men, alas! seem to think too much of their evening clothes. These heroes are almost afraid that a drop of gravy will fall upon their im-

MONOSYLLABLE EPIGRAMS FROM TRUTH.

By COL. JOHN A. JOYCE.

Soul is life.
Gold is guilt.
Gold is the god of the globe.
Feast and the world joins you.
God is spirit and spirit is G-I.
Those who talk much do little.
It is great to be good and just.
Sleep and death are twins of rest.
If God is not God, man is not man.
Where love reigns far is not a guest.
Trust in God, but never fall to work.
Get out of the way if you will not work.
We get what we give and die as we live.
When right is right strike first with might.
High birth is a lone guest at a low table.
He who is bought for gold will sell for gold.
He who lives well will die well and rest well.
Evil from evil springs in oot and halls of kings.
The bride of love and faith is the bride of truth.
The heart and soul of a fool are ever in his mouth.
To know, to love, and part are tests that try the heart.
Tell and act the truth and you will beat your worst foe.
The clock of fate strikes the death knell of all men.
The pride that hides our hurts helps to heal the scars.
It's easy to be just and true if you give me what I give you.
Those who trust a trust may trust in a trust that has no trust.
The poor and the weak are food for the rich and the strong.
Face death with a smile and you break the back of his fate.
What might have been does not help what is or what will be.
A wise man knows more than he says, and says less than he knows.
To know how little we know is to know how much we ought to know.

DEATH OF MR. PARKER.

South Dakota Representative Was Well Known in Washington.

Representative William H. Parker, who died at Deadwood, S. Dak., on Friday night, after an illness of three weeks, will be buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

Representative Parker was well known in Washington, having worked and studied here a number of years. His wife was Miss Clara E. Thomas, of Washington.

In the last session of the House, Representative Parker attracted national attention, he being the only Republican to sign the petition circulated by the Democratic party, requesting the Speaker to allow the House to enact legislation putting wood pulp and print paper on the free list.

Mr. Parker was born at Keene, N. H., May 5, 1847. He served during the civil war in the Union army. He was graduated in law from Columbia University in 1888, and admitted to practice before the District courts.

President Grant appointed him collector of internal revenue for Colorado Territory in 1874. He was later made United States attorney for that State, and in 1889 was elected a member of the House from South Dakota.

Better Keep Quiet.

PYTHIANS PLAN FOR AUGUST

Grand Chancellor Gives Members Details of Boston Convention.

Hopes for a Creditable Showing by the Mother Lodge City—Many Interesting Events.

The grand lodge committee on Boston clubs, of the Knights of Pythias, in charge of obtaining information and transmitting it to the membership, with a view to organizing clubs among the members for the trip to Boston to attend the Pythian meeting, have made a report to Grand Chancellor C. H. Woodward, and he has communicated the report to the subordinate lodges of the order.

The report states that the committee, on behalf of the subordinate lodges, as well as two of the Uniform Rank companies, which have entered the national competitive drill, will leave here for Boston on Sunday, August 2, at 9 o'clock, stopping a few hours in New York City. They will arrive in Boston early next morning.

The following is quoted from the committee report: The Somerset Hotel will be the headquarters of the Supreme Lodge, where the sessions of that body will be held. Franklin Field, the site of the Uniform Rank camp, will afford superb accommodations. The finest camp the rank ever had, is the claim made for this location. The plans at Boston cover events for day and evening, August 4 to 8; opening of the Supreme Lodge, 10 a. m.; August 4; parade of Uniform Rank in the afternoon; subordinate lodge parade and Pythian Sisters, August 5.

"These and other events make up one of the most attractive programmes ever arranged for a Pythian meeting of this character. Indications point to the largest attendance in the order's history. The mother domain of the order should be largely represented."

The grand chancellor, in transmitting the report, says in part: "Lodges are urged to read this letter in open lodge, and to fully acquaint the membership with its contents, in order that all may understand the details for the great meeting at Boston, and in this manner procure an attendance that will be creditable to the birthplace of our honored order."

Uses of a London Church.

From the London Globe. The Church of All Hallows, London Wall, presents a strange appearance every morning. The building is opened early for the accommodation of girls and women who arrive in the city by the "workmen's" trains, which frequently are run at such an hour as to compel the passengers to make a long wait after arriving in the city for their places of business to open. A short service is conducted and then the congregation is permitted and even encouraged to employ themselves with needlework or with reading. The women and girls are provided with reading matter, though care is taken that it shall not be too narrow in its range.

When you have lost or found anything, telephone an advertisement to The Washington Herald and bill will be sent you at 1 cent a word.
